Indian Expedition which was launched on 30 November, 1985. It returned to India on 24 March, 1986.

(b) The expedition team consisted of 88 persons. The number of scientists in the team was 21, including two women scientists. The other member were for the logistic support. A fourteen member team has been left behind to undergo wintering in Antarctica and will return to India in March; 1987.

(c) Investigations were undertaken under two major areas namely the exploration of living and non-living resources of Antarctica. In the field of meteorology, an automatic data collection platform was installed successfully near the Dakshin Gangotri station which transmits weather data from Antarctica to India daily. Geological and Geophysical investigations were conducted in the eastern Wohlthat mountain range and Schirmacher Range which are located at 190 km and 75 km respectively southwest of the Dakshin Gangotri. Other scientific disciplines investigated included fatigue of materials exposed to Antarctic conditions, geo-magnetism and marine microbiology. Indigenous solar panels were also tested for their performance in Antarctic conditions.

New Delhi talks between India and UK on extremists
